Home Support and Supported Living Quality Assurance Framework Guidance

Appendix 1 - Criteria and example evidence requirements

The tables below list the 79 criteria aligned to each of the 5 care domains and provide examples of the evidence that is required to achieve a Silver rating. The evidence examples are not an exhaustive list and as such are not intended to stifle creativity in the way that good care is delivered.

Criteria that are highlighted in Gold are advanced with the potential to achieve a Gold rating.

Criteria that are highlighted in Red are mandatory and all must be Fully achieved within a domain to gain a Silver rating or all Partly achieved to gain a Bronze rating.

Gold evidence examples

Listed below are examples of the type and style of evidence that is required for a Gold rating to be awarded.

Care and welfare of service users

- The service uses imaginative and innovative ways to manage risk and keep people safe while making sure they have a full and meaningful life. The service actively seeks out new technology and solutions to make sure that people have as few restrictions possible.
- There is a transparent and open culture that encourages creative thinking in relation to people's safety. The service seeks out current best practice and uses learning from this to drive improvement.
- Staff show empathy and have an enabling attitude that encourages people to challenge themselves while recognising and respecting their lifestyle choices.
- The service receives very high levels of outcome delivery approvals over a prolonged period from social workers during individual case reviews.
- The service is focused on providing person-centred care and it achieves exceptional results. Ongoing improvement is seen as essential. The service strives to be known as outstanding and innovative in providing person-centred care based on best practice.
- The service is flexible and responsive to people's individual needs and preferences, finding creative ways to enable people to live as full a life as possible. Where the service is responsible, the arrangements for social activities, and where appropriate education and work, are innovative and meet people's individual needs.

- The care provider demonstrates commitment to and evidence of being positively affirming in relation to the Equality Act (2010) protected characteristics – Age; Disability; Gender reassignment; Marriage and civil partnerships; Race; Religion or belief; Gender; and Sexual orientation:
 - Acquiring knowledge – Training, materials and awareness raising sessions are provided to employees and service users to enable them to become more knowledgeable about issues and history in relation to different races, disabilities, religions and beliefs and gender identities and sexual orientations.
 - Responding to prejudice and listening to complaints – Evidence (supervision records, care records, complaint records) that employees and service users are encouraged to challenge prejudice or discriminatory comments rather than letting them pass. Employees are provided with training about how to constructively challenge discrimination and to begin conversations about equality issues. Recognition evident that it can be difficult for people to make complaints and there is evidence that people's concerns about language and attitudes are taken seriously and that they are actively encouraged to raise concerns in a variety of different ways.
 - Gaining permission – Evidence (care records) that discussion has taken place and permission has been sought from the service user to share or keep private aspects of their identity, for example, religion or belief, disability, health condition, sexual orientation, gender identity.
 - Listening well and use of language – Evidence (care records, employee feedback) that discussion has taken place with the service user to understand the language they use to describe themselves and whether they want staff to use the same or different words. People may use a variety of language depending on the situation and company when describing their race, heritage, religion, disability, sexual orientation or gender identity.
 - Respecting closeness and offering private space – Evidence (care records, service user and staff feedback, physical environment) that discussion has taken place with the service user to check who the significant people are in a person's life and to recognise that they may not be biological family members. Private space is available for service users to meet with significant people in their life or observe aspects of their identity, for example, relating to culture, heritage, religion or belief.
 - Saying it clearly – Welcome packs, messages in company literature, posters and promotional materials positively welcome people as individuals, use diverse imagery and detail the action the organisation will take to support people to integrate, and feel comfortable and safe living in the care setting. The organisation will set out how it positively affirms service user identity differences in relation to age, disability, race, religion or belief, gender identity and sexual orientation.
 - Giving representation – The care setting has identified 'Champions' or points of contact among its workforce or service users, Board or advisory groups to represent and respond to the views and needs of the different groups or individuals. Recognition should be made that individuals or groups of people may need their own representative and to avoid making assumptions, for example, trans people may want or need a different 'champion' from that representing lesbian or gay people.
 - Identifying support networks – Service users are provided with details of support networks in relation to their individual characteristics and needs.

Meeting nutritional needs

- There is a strong emphasis on the importance of eating and drinking well. Where the service is responsible, innovative methods and positive staff relationships are used to encourage those who are reluctant or have difficulty in eating and drinking.
- This approach makes sure that people's dietary and fluid intake, especially those living with dementia or those with a learning disability, significantly improves their well-being.
- There are excellent links with dietetic professionals and staff are aware of people's individual preferences and patterns of eating and drinking. These preferences are sustained over time, as their health allows.

Cooperate with other providers / community and partnerships

- Links with health and social care services are excellent. Where people have complex/continued health needs, staff always seek to improve their care, treatment and support by identifying and implementing best practice.
- Relationships are established with best practice organisations to deliver high quality care.
- Where appropriate, the service takes a key role in the local community and is actively involved in building further links. Input from other services and support networks are encouraged and sustained.
- Managers and leaders are well known in the local community sharing experience and expertise.
- The service makes links with the local community when its service users require advocates or independent support.
